

School zones remain active despite distance learning, CCSD police say

Clark County School District students remain in distance learning, but CCSDPD is reminding parents school zones are still active. Flashing lights and lower speed limits are still being enforced, even though students are not inside classrooms.

LAS VEGAS (KTNV) — Clark County School District students remain in distance learning, but CCSDPD is reminding parents school zones are still active. Flashing lights and lower speed limits are still being enforced, even though students are not inside classrooms.

The reduced speed limits are needed to keep those using food distribution sites safe. School zones are active at over 300 locations across the Las Vegas valley that are serving as food pickup locations.

The school zone lights have been switched from school hours to food distribution hours.
